

The book assumes the same process for everywhere. Do you think that idea needs to be de-colonized?

Widmer says that Bolo'bolo could be instituted in five years. How realistic is this, what would have to be prepared to begin the transition and do you think it is at all feasible?

What would transition towns, states and territories look like?

Could rebellions like the Zapatistas be replicated in hundreds of places around the world?

Is social mass sabotage realistic?

What other aspects of society need to be addressed besides the ones covered by Widmer?

What is your personal relationship with creating an anarchist society?

Are we too far gone to realize any of these possibilities?

How do the worlds envisioned in The Dispossessed, The Fifth Sacred Thing, The Parable of the Sower and Walkaway relate to Bolo'bolo?

Why do people tend to trust more those politicians and economic leaders who have proven their complete irresponsibility time and time again more than ourselves and our own ability to take things in our own hands?

FURTHER READING:

Ecotopia Ernest Callenbach

Comunitas Paul and Percival Goodman

Utopia, Thomas Moore

Herland Charlotte Perkins Gilman

Woman on the Edge of Time Marge Piercy

Island Aldous Huxley